Mission Bay

The RV Wheelers' October campout was to the Mission Bay North Park in San Diego. We had 17 rigs there for the six night stay. The sites were quite large because it was once a mobile home park. In fact, Deb's site was so big that it was used as a gathering spot for the other campers.

Since there is much to do in San Diego we carpooled to check things out, and those with E-Bikes often rode them. Many in the group visited the Museum of Illusions and learned how easily our senses can be fooled. Another interesting trip was the "Hop on, Hop off" Trolley, starting in Old Town and went all the way to the Hotel Del Coronado and back.

Evenings at the RV park were spent socializing around the large fire pit provided by John McKay. Although the arrangements for the outing were made by Wagon masters Ron and Roslyn, there were no official hosts to plan the activities, but the participants made their own plans as a group, and it worked out well.

It should be noted that if you plan to go to Mission Bay North Park be sure to take extra cables and hoses because the hookups are all at the front of the sites, as they were for the mobile homes.

Newport Dunes Campout

Newport Dunes is always a popular destination with RV Wheelers and rain did not dampen the gathering in November, hosted by Fitz Fitzgerald and Jan Levinrad. After the welcome happy hour on Thursday, rain clouds started to gather so the 27 participants started the fires and had three fire pits going for evening socializing. Since Thursday was World Kindness Day, Jan Levinrad provided art supplies for those who wanted to create posters with inspirational kindness thoughts. Several took part, and some posted their artwork in their rigs so that it could be seen by passers-by.

During the four days of the campout there were three days of rain, sometimes torrential, but the campers played games in each other's rigs, while cooking lessons happened in others. On Saturday night, while many were hunkered down in their RV's, Kevin and Suzanne Clover went door-to-door bringing freshly baked cookies and no one turned them down!

On Sunday afternoon the skies cleared, the sun came out, so the outdoor games were set up, and the campers came out to play and socialize.

In spite of the off and on rain the campout was considered a success because the campers would not let it dampen their spirits.

When thunder roars, go indoors!

Cookies, any takers?
